It was alleged that there was a dispute during which McEighan was struck on the head with a stone.
The defendants claimed that McEighan initiated the quarrel and that the stone was thrown in self-defense.

A large party of men were gathered in an alley. White was beset by a number of men who were trying to get him to enlist. (Miller was in the service). Several disputes arose and the men broke up. Later Miller came to White's home and accused him of using objectionable language and said that he had something in his pocket that would settle it. Miller then left and then White left. Later Miller was found dead on the sidewalk. A witness claimed that he saw a man running from the scene of the crime but the man did not fit the description of the accused.

Weitman was at Ringler's house in the company of Ringler, his wife and daughters. Weitman said that when his wife died he would take one of the Ringler girls as his second wife. This angered Ringler and a fight ensued. They got up and Mrs. Ringler was pulling her husband into the house when she fell. Then Weitman fell on Ringler. Ringler died soon after.
